

British Aggregates Association

Press Notice - 11 May 2006 Immediate

LEGAL DECISION SPURS ON QUARRY INDUSTRY CLAIMS

A recent opinion from an official adviser to the European Court has reinforced the need for quarry companies to lodge precautionary claims for repayment of Aggregates Levy which may have been collected illegally.

According to the recently reported Opinion of the Advocate-General in the IRAP case ( Banca Popolare di Cremona v Agenzia Entrate Ufficio Cremona C-475/03), the illegality of a tax may not be relied upon in order to claim reimbursement except by persons who have made early claims.

British Aggregates Association director Robert Durward;

If the principle that was followed in this case were to be applied to the British Aggregates Association case, currently before the Court of First Instance, then this could have extremely serious implications for any quarry operator who has not yet submitted a precautionary claim.

Although the Court is not bound to follow this Opinion it does in fact normally follow Advocate-General recommendations. Therefore, if the Advocate-General's opinion is followed by the Court, and the scope of the Court's decision is not restricted to the particular Italian issue, it would follow that precautionary claims by quarry operators will need to be made prior to the decision being announced in the BAA case.

Robert Durward;

Our association has been warning its members, as well as the wider industry, since the start of this year, that they should lodge claims for repayment of all the Levy they have paid without delay to protect them against the possible imposition of a three year cut-off rule. However, the far reaching implications of this ruling make postponing a claim any longer a risk not worth taking.
